GROWTH IN JAPAN

Directly behind the House of Hope, and directly across the street from our own house, there is a vacant plot of land. After the tsunami, the owners took down what was left of their house and moved to a safer location. Through a neighbor, who is a mutual friend, we agreed to take care of their land in exchange for free use as a parking lot. This has been a win-win for everyone, including those who live on our street or stroll by every day. Instead of dust and high, unsightly weeds, there is a border of violets by the street and pretty colored wild flowers by the back wall. There is also a vegetable garden.

Last summer when Dean was in the hospital, some of the neighbors took on the community veggie patch. Amidst Covid restrictions it was a great outdoor project and a special way for people to “cheer for” Dean’s recovery. They planted the first week in May, about the time my favorite husband was able to move only half his body. They hoped that when he came home, there would be fresh vegetables ready for him to eat. The timing worked out perfectly, and it was good for neighbor relations.

This year, however, we are the ones in charge. A year ago we never would have guessed that when summer 2021 rolled around, we would STILL be under strict Covid restrictions. But here we are, with the vaccine rollout just now getting slowly underway. This summer, too, most of our “people time” will be outside.

As gardeners, we are very much beginners. Thankfully, though, we have some veteran veggie growers nearby who are diligently watching over us and advising us. So far we have planted tomatoes, several kinds of lettuce, green peppers and paprika, parsley, basil, zucchini, summer squash, a random cucumber plant, green beans and CORN! (We’re VERY excited about the corn.) We are enjoying watching things grow and being out in the neighborhood while we work, but we are also realizing this is a rather time-consuming venture.

It’s very much like planting seeds of the gospel in the hearts of those around us. We plant, we water (sometimes a LOT), we ask advice, we try to be attentive, we PRAY!!! And God brings the good results. (I Corinthians 3:7) We’re already quite pleased with how many neighbors we see more regularly while we’re in the garden. But, indeed, it is GOD who makes both plants and faith grow. Because of THIS, we are hopeful.

We’d love to have you join us in praying for a good harvest of both kinds. After all, to quote a former missionary, “The prayer of believers is THE key to turning Japan to the light and love of Christ.”
